mechanical elements where the operating system is placed, and applications to access to user resources in remote computers (col 5, lines 47-51, memory, CPU).

Referring to claim 6, Bennett discloses the cordless terminal (col 3, lines 38-40, wireless terminal) in accordance with claim 4, wherein the mobile terminal and the support module both have a cordless communication module operatively suitable for a permanent remote communication (col 4, lines 53-57, communication); and wherein the mobile terminal and the support module have common plugs connecting both when said mobile terminal is placed on the support module comprising the common plugs (col 3, lines 38-44, dock; when docked - delivers information), a recharging connection of the feeding batteries by means of a smart battery (col 5, lines 24-26, recharging), a charger (col 5, lines 20-25, dock, terminal can be recharged upon insertion into the dock), and a broad band data connection (col 4, lines 53-57, Ethernet link).

Referring to claim 7, Bennett discloses the cordless terminal (col 3, lines 38-40, wireless terminal) in accordance with claim 5, wherein the mobile terminal and the support module both have a cordless communication module operatively suitable for a permanent remote communication (col 4, lines 53-57, communication); and wherein the mobile terminal and the support module have common plugs connecting both when said mobile terminal is placed on the support module comprising the common plugs (col 3, lines 38-44, dock; when docked - delivers information), a recharging connection of the feeding batteries by means of a smart battery (col 5, lines 24-26, recharging), a charger (col 5, lines 20-25, dock, terminal can be recharged upon insertion into the dock) , and a broad band data connection (col 4, lines 53-57, Ethernet link).

Referring to claim 8, Bennett discloses the cordless terminal (col 3, lines 38-40, wireless terminal) in accordance with claim 4, wherein the mobile terminal and support module are communicated in a cordless and continuous manner by transmission of radio electric waves or microwaves (col 5, lines 28-30, radio circuitry).

Referring to claim 9, Bennett discloses the cordless terminal (col 3, lines 38-40, wireless terminal) in accordance with claim 5, wherein the flat graphical screen is a liquid crystal display (col 5, lines 14-19, LCD).
